World Environment Day

When we close our eyes, and take a moment to visualize the environment, we see beautiful green trees, a colourful garden or even a fast-flowing river. We hear birds chirping, the rustling of leaves, the pitter-patter of the drizzling rain- all of this is beautiful to us. We weren't taught to love our environment, rather it comes naturally to us- because that's what connects us as humans, more than ever.

Our environment.

We have done a great deal of awful things to this beautiful place we call home, yet only some of us care about bringing it back, making it the place it once was. A place without melting glaciers, wildfires, extinct species of animals and most of all, a world with peace. Because I believe that the word environment doesn't just mean the external conditions of our surroundings or natural resources we get. It also means the people around us and how we support each other.

World Environment Day 2026:

This year, the theme for Environment Day was "Inspired by Nature, For Climate, For Our Future."

The global celebrations for the United Nations Environment Programme were hosted by Azerbaijan, a country with extremely kind people and diverse ecosystems. #Now For Climate was this year's official hashtag, promoting the theme, and focusing on the current global issues.

Environment Day at Our School:

Being a school student, we may think we don't have the freedom to do good for our environment. What we haven't realized is that all the small things we do now, like carrying reusable water bottles, using both sides of our papers and carpooling to school are more than what even an average adult can do, even with all the freedom they have.

This year, in our school, the students of class 10 have made badges for World Environment Day, on topics like Endangered species, flora, aquatic animals, reptiles and many more on our environment. These badges have been displayed on charts on the walls of our school in the passage leading to the quadrangle.

Our Earth, Our Hope:

As the inhabitants of earth who know exactly how to save lives and our environment, let's use our knowledge for the betterment of our surroundings.

We are not only citizens of India, but of the world. We are all one team, playing not against each other, but for each other. For our world.

Let us remember again that Earth is our only home. Let us do whatever it takes to keep it safe.

WORLD ENVIRONMENT DAY

The Day Of Our Environment, In The Past:

World Environment Day was established by the United Nations in 1972 during the Stockholm Conference on the Human Environment. It was officially celebrated on June 5 in 1973, but that doesn't mean we didn't care about our planet before that.

Almost 200 years before the establishment of world environment day, in Rajasthan,

363 Bishnoi villagers sacrificed their lives by hugging trees in their village to prevent them from being felled by the king's men. This could have been the root idea for our Chipko movement in India in the early 1970s.

John Muir, a visionary in the 19th century, advocated for the preservation of several wild animals, leading to the making of the world's first national park.

These people sparked longing in humans, the longing to make the world a better place.

"We cannot upgrade to Earth 2.0; we must protect the version we have."

"Protecting nature is not a choice, it's a responsibility we all share."

PUNNY PAGE

Punny means....

A page full of puns, jokes, funny captions, wordplay, comics, and humorous content.

The maths book looked sad because it had too many problems.

- I wanted to study chemistry, but I got no reaction.
- The history teacher always lives in the past.
- The pencil got promoted because it always had a point.
- The English book and I are on the same page.
- The ruler became famous because it always measured up.
- The computer passed the exam because it had great memory.
- I failed my geometry test — I just couldn't angle it.
- Studying for exams is a real test of patience.
- My homework and I are in a complicated relationship.

EVOLUTION OF HUMAN ETHICS

FROM INSTINCT TO INTROSPECTION.

FROM INSTINCT TO INTROSPECTION.

Have you ever wondered why we feel guilt, even when we are not personally responsible? These instincts hint at a moral sense intrinsic to us: one that ethics, the branch of philosophy that studies morality, has long tried to explain. Tracing the development of our moral philosophy over the ages can reveal how we evolved as humans.

Long before formal philosophy, early humans developed moral codes rooted in cooperation, empathy, and survival. Archaeological evidence, such as burial sites and care for the injured, suggests a moral awareness far richer than mere self-preservation. As societies grew more complex, these intuitions gave way to structured inquiry. In ancient Greece, Socrates, Plato, and Aristotle placed reason and virtue at the centre of a good life, while in the East, Confucius emphasised social harmony through duty and respect, and the Buddha advocated compassion and the alleviation of suffering.

In the early modern period, Locke and Kant shifted focus toward individual reasoning and universal rights, laying the groundwork for modern democratic values. Today, ethics has expanded further still: AI raises dilemmas over privacy and human connection, while environmental crises force us to reckon with our responsibilities to future generations.

Ethics is not a rigid set of what's right or wrong; that's what laws are. It is far more thorough – a way of life that evolves as we do.

The Unspoken Reality of Student Life

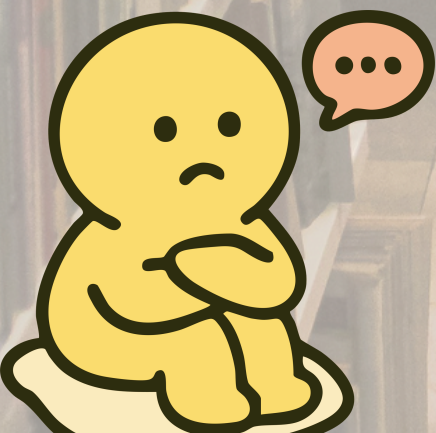

Akshita V 135588. Class 12-B

Have you ever sat in a classroom full of people and still felt completely alone? Have you smiled at a teacher, nodded at a parent, said "I'm fine" — when everything inside you was anything but? If you have, you're probably not an exception. You're the rule. And nobody's talking about it enough.

Student life looks golden from the outside. To parents, a quiet child is studying. To teachers, a submitted assignment means everything's okay. But they don't see the sleepless nights, the anxious rewrites, the weight of expectations — from others and, worse, from yourself. The comparison, the self-doubt, the feeling that everyone else has it figured out while you're barely holding on. What looks manageable from the outside rarely feels that way on the inside. What makes it harder is the silence. Students swallow their struggles — afraid of being a burden, unsure of the right words, smiling in class while quietly falling apart at home. But student life isn't just pressure; it's also the friendships built in chaos, the laughs with the besties, the rare moment when something finally clicks. All of it — the hard and the good is shaping you. And sometimes all it takes is one person asking, "How are you, really?" — and actually meaning it.

In my opinion,

“Student life is not the easiest chapter — but it's the one that shapes every chapter that comes after”.

CALM WATERS DON'T MAKE STRONG SAILORS

Life can be likened to a voyage over water bodies. There will be moments of tranquility during such expeditions, making one feel comfortable. While it is nice to experience comfort, it does not necessarily help in developing character. Challenges are what make individuals better and more knowledgeable.

Struggles are necessary in life since they provide us with valuable lessons. Setbacks teach individuals patience and persistence, while struggles give us courage and self-confidence. None of these attributes can develop if things go smoothly. Exams make students disciplined, while defeats motivate students.

Furthermore, difficulties reveal some of our hidden abilities. Most individuals realize what they are capable of, only during tough times. They learn how to adapt, reason and progress despite the obstacles.

To sum up, although the calmness of the water makes sailing enjoyable, it fails to make individuals skilled sailors. Similarly, life struggles define our personalities.

Two People Same Situation Completely Different Stories

From the moment we are born, we are made to think in ways that make sense to us. We mostly see life from our own perspective, and only occasionally try to view things from someone else's point of view .

That's natural we're human, and we cannot read minds. Consider a simple situation, two students receive the same average mark on a test. One spends the entire day criticising oneself, feeling like he/ she has failed. The other accepts it and decides to work harder next time. Neither reaction is completely right or wrong, but it shows how differently the human mind can respond to the same event.

Our thoughts are shaped by our experiences and mindset. Sometimes, however, many of us think alike—like during the COVID-19 pandemic, when fear and caution was shared by almost everyone because of the news , newspaper, social media and articles . This raises an interesting question, are our thoughts truly our own or are they influenced by the world around us? Even in everyday interactions, differences appear. Two people can be part of the same conversation and walk away with completely different interpretations, one could be overthinking, while the other simply observing.

The situation remains the same, but the internal experience changes. That is the nature of life. Events do not always change, but perspectives do. A single moment can be seen as a problem or an opportunity, a delay or a pause, a burden or a memory. The experience stays constant, but the story we tell ourselves about it never does.

SOCIAL

Responsibility

Social Responsibility

Social responsibility means doing what is right for our society and caring for others. It is not only the duty of leaders but also of each one of us.

As students, we can show social responsibility in simple ways. We can help our friends, respect our teachers and be kind to everyone. We should keep our surroundings clean, avoid wasting food, and save water and electricity. We also have a responsibility to be honest and stand up for what is right. If we see something wrong we should not ignore it, instead we should try to make it right in a positive way.

In today's world, problems like pollution and inequality are increasing. These issues can only be solved if everyone takes responsibility and works together. Let us all remember that even small actions can bring big changes. A small act of kindness can make someone's day better and inspire others too.

As it is rightly said, "the best way to find yourself is to lose yourself in the service of others."

In conclusion, let us all promise to be responsible citizens and contribute to a better and happier society.
